

U.S. Global Health Budget: The Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria

The Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria (Global Fund) is an independent, public-private, multilateral institution which finances HIV, TB, and malaria programs in low- and middle-income countries. The Global Fund receives contributions from public and private donors and in turn provides funding to countries based on country-defined proposals. The U.S. provided the Global Fund with its founding contribution in 2001 and has since been its largest single donor. U.S. contributions to the Global Fund rose significantly in the last decade, and reached a peak of $1.65 billion in FY 2014; after declining to $1.35 billion in FY 2015, U.S. funding for the Global Fund has since remained flat. Congress places a number of restrictions on U.S. contributions to the Global Fund, including total U.S. contributions must not exceed 33% of total contributions from all donors. In FY 2019, the Global Fund accounted for the second largest share of U.S. funding for global health (12%). The President's FY 2020 request includes $958 million for the Global Fund in FY 2020, a cut of $392 million (-29%) below the FY 2019 level.¹

¹ In the FY20 Request, the administration is proposing to make a pledge of up to $3.3 billion over three years for the next Global Fund replenishment period, matching $1 for every $3 contributed by other donors (in the previous replenishment period under the Obama administration, the U.S. pledged up to $4.3 billion, matching $1 for every $2 provided by other donors). For the first year of this pledge, the administration is proposing to provide a total of $1.1 billion to the Global Fund: $958 million from FY20 and $142 million in unmatched carryover funding from the previous pledge period.
